STATEMENT

Australia's vaccination programs are designed to optimise health across the population and PQSA's approach to our workers receiving vaccinations will be guided by expert medical and health advice.

We acknowledge the decision to receive a vaccination or not is a very personal and individual matter, but we strongly encourage all of our workers to heed expert medical advice, particularly in relation to annual vaccinations against influenza (the 'flu') and pandemic viruses such as COVID-19. If necessary, workers should seek additional advice from their own personal General Practitioner when it comes to the decision to receive a vaccination or not.

Whilst it is not our general policy to mandate vaccinations, we will enact this with our workers where government legislation or funding body requirements demands this as part of our core service delivery and/or contracted service requirements. Any exemptions to this will be based on the relevant legislation or funding body rules.

We may also mandate specific vaccinations with workers where a thorough risk assessment determines this is a reasonable course of action; in that instance, we will consult with our workers and communicate the outcomes of this risk assessment to ensure our decision-making is clearly understood.

We will run periodic health promotion and information campaigns as part of our worker, health and wellbeing framework and broader workplace health and safety policies and procedures.

We may choose to support our workers to access vaccinations through structured programs in partnership with healthcare providers and will also endeavour to ensure our workers are not financially disadvantaged when receiving vaccinations.
